

Mary Oliver

Landscape in Winter

Upon the snow that says nothing, that is endlessly brilliant,
there is something heaped, dark and motionless.

Then come the many wings, strong and bold.
“Death has happened,” shout the carrion crows,
“And this is good for us.”

Evidence

Boston, Beacon Press, 2009:41